THE CHRISTMAS SANTA SAT DOWN

By Lanie (Grade 7)

Snowflakes drifted like tiny feathers over the North Pole as Christmas Eve approached. The workshop buzzed, chimneys puffed little clouds of cheer, and the elves were tying the final ribbons on the final presents. But inside the Reindeer Barn, something unexpected happened. Santa had been testing a brand-new sleigh modification—a turbo-boost landing gear, invented by Jingle the Tinkering Elf. Santa climbed in, gave Dasher the signal, and whoooooosh! The sleigh zoomed up... and then plop! It landed much harder than expected. “Oooof!” Santa winced. “That wasn’t supposed to happen.” The elves rushed over. Dr. Snowflake, the North Pole’s Christmas healer, examined Santa carefully and shook her head gently. “Santa, you’ve strained your back. You must rest. No flying around the world tonight.” The workshop went silent.

“No Christmas?” whispered a tiny elf named Peppermint.

Santa sat up straighter—well, as straight as his sore back allowed. “Christmas will always happen,” he said. “But this year... the elves will have to deliver the presents.” The elves blinked.

Then Jingle raised a hand. “We can do it. We know the routes. We built the sleigh. We can fly it!” Santa smiled. “I believe in you.” The elves worked faster than ever before. They lengthened the sleigh seats, adjusted the reins for smaller hands, and packed hot cocoa for the long trip.

Twinkle, the fastest elf, took the pilot’s seat. “Reindeer, ready!” The reindeer pawed the snow, eager to help. With a sparkling burst of magic, the sleigh shot into the sky, elves cheering and scarves fluttering like small snowflake. They were so quick and clever that even the reindeer were impressed.

“Honestly,” Dasher whispered mid-flight, “why hasn’t Santa let them help more often?” By dawn, every present had been placed, every stocking stuffed, and every cookie taste-tested (for quality assurance, of course). The elves landed back at the North Pole to find Santa waiting outside with a warm blanket around his shoulders.

“You did it,” Santa said with a proud twinkle in his eye. “You saved Christmas.”

Twinkle grinned. “We just wanted to make you proud.”

Santa hugged them gently. “I always am.” And from that year on, even after Santa’s back healed, the elves helped deliver presents every Christmas Eve—because together, they made the magic even brighter.
